

Too much homework

By Tsoi Ho Wai, Vic (6A)

Yesterday afternoon, when Calvin just came back home from school, his parents were so sleepy that they took a nap, leaving Calvin alone doing his homework. Soon after his parents fell asleep, he started to do homework. However, he had plenty of homework so he did it as slowly as a snail. Since he had too much pressure at school, he thought of playing computer games to release the stress.

While he was playing an online gun game, suddenly there was some smoking coming out of the computer and then it broke down. At this moment, he panicked because he was afraid his parents would scold him after they woke up. As predicted, after waking up, they were so shocked to see what happened that their face turned red with anger. Although Calvin apologized to them for not doing homework and damaging the computer, his parents still scolded and punished him. After this incident, he learned that he should focus his attention on doing homework rather than playing games.
